Sports and athleisure footwear company Campus Active wear plans to expand its distribution network and deepen its footprints in western and southern regions. The company is planning to get listed on stock exchanges in May 2022.

Besides, the homegrown footwear maker, which is backed by equity fund TPG Growth and QRG Enterprises, also plans to expand its offering in the high-margin women and kids’ portfolio. As part of this strategy, Campus will strengthen its network of Exclusive Brand Outlets (EBO) and enhance its omnichannel presence and online sales. Campus will continue to build the D2C channel for driving premiumization and growth in other consumer segments like women and kids. The company expects that these initiatives will substantially increase its network coverage across India. The company also plans to hire additional hands to supplement its sales network expansion. Presently, Campus has around 100 exclusive brand stores, of which around 65 are company-owned and the rest are on the franchise model. In FY21, Campus added 190 new distributors while in the first half (April-September) of FY22, it added 53 distributors.

Q.6. Attempt all parts of the following:

6(a) What would be your recommendation for the Campus brand in terms of distribution strategy?

6(b) How should Campus manage its omnichannel strategy in order to penetrate further in the market?
