SECTION-C

Watson Public Ltd Company, renowned for its employee-oriented practices, faces material supply challenges despite its commitment to employee equality. With a diverse workforce of over 1,000, the company emphasizes equality, evident in uniformity and identical amenities for all staff. Although it maintains a positive relationship with a registered trade union and boasts a low strike rate, recent issues in material supply disrupt its operations. The management attributes these problems to system loopholes and tasks the HR department with finding a solution. The HR manager discovers that the root cause lies in the hiring process. The company's decision to bring in new employees for higher-level positions, overlooking internal candidates, and offering them superior compensation, creates discontent among existing staff, leading to a casual approach in their work. This revelation prompts a need for internal restructuring to address employee grievances and enhance overall operational efficiency.

Q.4. Attempt all parts of the following:

(2×8=16)

- 4(a) How does the company's emphasis on employee equality, reflected in its uniform policy and welfare initiatives, contrast with the challenges it faces in material supply?
- 4(b) Why did the HR manager focus on internal dynamics like the hiring process and compensation packages, rather than systemic issues in various departments, when tasked with solving material supply problems?
