SECTION-C

McDonald's is one of the largest fast-food chains globally, serving millions of customers daily. Its vast menu is designed to appeal to a wide range of tastes and preferences. McDonald's segments its market based on factors such as age, income, family size, and education. For example, it targets children with Happy Meals, families with combo meals, and adults with coffee-based products through its McCafé brand. They target different lifestyles and personalities. Health-conscious consumers are offered salads, fruit, and low-calorie options. Meanwhile, value-seeking customers are attracted to the Dollar Menu. They cater to consumers based on usage frequency and loyalty. Frequent customers are offered deals through the McDonald's app, while occasional customers are targeted with limited-time offers and promotions. McDonald's creates marketing campaigns tailored to specific groups. For example, Happy Meals target children, while breakfast menu promotions cater to early-morning workers. McDonald's also introduces regional or culturally specific items to cater to local tastes (e.g., the McAloo Tikki in India). McDonald's positions itself as a fast, convenient, and affordable option for a wide range of consumers. Their branding focuses on family-friendly service, consistency, and variety, making the restaurant a suitable choice for different market segments.

McDonald's success lies in its ability to appeal to different segments by offering a wide menu, focusing on both price-conscious and health-conscious consumers, and adapting its offerings based on local markets.

Q.4. Attempt all parts of the following:

(2×10=20)

4(a) How does McDonald's use demographic and psychographic segmentation to differentiate between its target markets?

4(b) What strategies does McDonald's use to balance its offerings between health-conscious consumers and value-conscious customers?
